To Whom It May Concern:

Re : Mechanical Plating

Please be advised that we do not accept any items for Mechanical plating, which is not in its original manufactured state. This includes items that have already been plated or subjected to any other treatment excluding heat treatment, which could have an effect on the molecular structure (E.g.: Tensile strength and hydrogen embrittlement) of the substrate material.

Many plating and coating processing of heat treated and hardened items, could have a detrimental and lasting effect on the substrate structure, whereas Mechanical plating is renowned throughout the world as a process which provides an embrittlement free coating that will not compromise the tensile strength or introduce any hydrogen embrittlement, being the very reason Mechanical plating has become so necessary and popular.

Furthermore, we wish to advise our customers that we do not hold or promote the view that Mechanical plating is a replacement for hot dip galvanising. Each type has its own applications and properties and that neither is an alternative for one another.

Team Plating Works cc will therefore NOT accept liability should any article AFTER being Mechanical Plated fail for any reason in its application for which it was manufactured because of any flaw which might have occurred BEFORE mechanical plated and/or the failure of our customers to understand its properties.
